The Centre for Studies in Family Medicine is a Senate-approved Centre at Western University that conducts, fosters, disseminates, implements and develops capacity for excellent interdisciplinary research in family medicine, primary care, health systems and community health

We realize the vision of the Centre for Studies in Family Medicine through conducting diverse programs of research:

- Patient-centred care

- Chronic disease prevention and management (with an emphasis on diabetes, including in Indigenous communities)

- Multimorbidity

- Healthy aging

- Mental health across the lifespan

- Primary health care services delivery including access, integration, and coordination of services

- Optimization of health information and technology

- The natural history of common symptoms in family practice and their outcomes

- Population health

- Research on scaling up of innovations
