Register here for this Zoom session

“Challenging Choices: Canada’s Population Control in the 1970s”

The challenges of global reproductive health are complex and multifaceted, and the issue of population control touches upon the sensitive areas of contraception, abortion, reproductive politics, personal autonomy, and more. By the 1970s, Canadians enjoyed greater sexual freedoms, legal access to birth control, and the decriminalization of homosexuality … against the shadow of eugenics. Erika Dyck and Maureen Lux explore who had access to reproductive choices and who remained under the state’s watchful eye in a new era of family planning.

Erika Dyck, PhD
CRC in the History of Medicine
University of Saskatchewan

Maureen Lux, PhD
Professor, History
Brock University

An event organized by the History of Medicine Office
Contact Person: Hannah Professor Shelley McKellar smckell@uwo.ca

To learn more visit: www.schulich.uwo.ca/historymedicine/visitingspeaker.html