United Health Services (UHS) is a regional health system in upstate New York. This not-for-profit health care network includes seven divisions: Chenango Memorial Hospital, Delaware Valley Hospital, Senior Living at Ideal, UHS Home Care, UHS Primary Care, Binghamton General Hospital, and Wilson Regional Medical Center. The latter three make up the UHS Hospitals subsidiary. All together, the system has almost 920 beds. Among its specialized services are oncology, heart care, neurology, orthopedics, diagnostics, and emergency medicine. Other services include care centers for children and families, home health care providers, and an independent and assisted-living center for senior citizens.

Skilled, licensed personnel of the UHS' pathology and laboratory medicine team includes board certified pathologists in several subspecialties, licensed pathologists' assistants, medical technologists, medical laboratory technicians, histotechnicians, and cytotechnologists. They process samples and provide the results to physicians and surgeons to aid in accurate diagnosis and treatment planning. Accredited by the New York State Department of Health and the College of American Pathologists, UHS laboratories have state-of-the-art equipment updated every five to seven years.

The subspecialty certifications/fellowship trainings held by the pathologists include but are not limited to:

- Hematopathology
- Gastro- intestinal and liver pathology
- Cytopathology
- Neuropathology
- Breast and GYN pathology
- Dermatopathology
- Genito-Urinary pathology
- Autopsy Services
